A Cruel Piece of Stupidity.

Not many days ago the beavens opened and the floods descended on New York and its moral sister, Brooklyo. The streets were deserted. Slanting sheets of rain danced upon the pavement and the whole city was dropohed. Men were at their work. Wemen sat and sewed, In a pleasant room in Williamsburg a happy little lady busied herself with household matters, sang to the baby on her knee and laid plans perhaps for the little one that was to be, A kocck at the door.

"Come in."

Ester officer, wat and cold and not overpleasant. "Are you Mrs. Miller?" said he. Amazad, astonished, apprehensive and alarm ed, "I am," said she. Showing her a bit of paper on which was scrawled the word, "Mue!ler" or "Miller," she knows not which, he said, "Is this your husband's hardwriting?" She saw and said it was not. "Well, any way, you must come to New York with mo."

"Weil, you'll find out when you get over there. Your husband wante you." "But it is raising, and I have no one to leave my baby with. Can't you wait half an hour ?" "No. Mg orders are to take you over as 8000 as I can." Visions of disaster to her husband passed before the young wif.'s eyes. She knew him to be delicate in health. Was he in trouble? Had he been court martialled by his regimen ? Had his babit of e garette smoking conquered uim, as precioted by the doctor?

"I don't owe at y hing anywhere, sir. What an be the matter?" "It you did we'd have nothing to do with it. Come, I must take you right along."

With this Mrs. Miller, who was agitated be youd conception, lets the room to dress for the trip. The errand of the officer was to inform the wife of a man who had dropped dead in Broad street that she was needed in the station bouse. Had he been a thoughtful man he might have taken the opportunity to communicate the fact to Mrs. Miller's landlady, who paby, recurred and together they started in the rempestuous storm for the Grand Street terry. S ill not a bint as to the nature of his errand was vouces fed by the gallant officer. The neighbir.—ever alert—siw a part of this and imagined more. "Mrs Miller's arrested," said one. "Caught shoplifting," said another. "The officer carried her off immediately," said a third, and by the time the trio reached the terryboat it was duly settled in Bouto Fifeb pretty picture they made on the ferryboat-he outf and silent, she faint and shaking. The baby fortugately slept. "Your husbend's a hard drinker, isu't he?"

said he. "He never dricks a drop," said she, Arrived at the further shore the turgid officer out his charges in a Balt line car, while he took post by the driver. Not - word of the ordeal to be faced, not a him of the blow to be received, had as yet been givon. Presently the our was stopped, and Mrs. Miller, wet to the ekin, holding her wide awake baby in her weary arms, while ner skir: dragged in the mud and water. was taken for the first time in her young life isto the . in a police station house. Placed at the rail she waited.

"W hat's your name?" "Mrs. Miller, Mr." "Husband been sick lately?" Now, her husband, who is a young clerk in great ficancial institution on Broadway, had left nor early in the day, and in his ordinary health. Therefore, wonderingly, she replied,"Why no. sir."

"Guess you're wrong, lady. He dropped dead on Broad street at ten o'clock this morning.

Present y she came to Where was she? Oh. y a The officer, the station house and Harry, dead! Again she fainted. After a white she revived. It was a pitiful tableau—a big. burly, brutal sergeant; a b g, burly, brutal officer, and the shocked and wretched widow. "How old are y u, Mrs. Miller?"

She gave herig.
Why, how old was your husband? "About twenty four sir."
"I wenty four! Why, see here, officer, there's some mistake here. The dead man was over eventy, and his name was't Killer either. It's Mueller, Say, lady, there's some mistake; you're discharged; you can go." "Mistake! discharged! Go-go where?"

"Why. go home." "Why, go as you came."
"But I don't know the way. I don't know where I am. What shall I do?'
To make a long story short, after awhile an officer was detailed to put the distracted woman the start her nomeward. Meantime the rain poured in torrents. The late hours of the afternoon hid come. The young husband, gorant of what was going on, started for the terry. He took matters leisurely and entered his home about support time.
